

EXTINCTION

and mRNA

HUGH CAMERON

There was an interesting case in the clinic this morning. A lady with an acutely sore knee, no history of trauma, gout, or anything else. The X-rays and an Ultrasound simply showed a swollen knee.

While medical journals and the media are silent, I see a lot of these nowadays. They resemble gout, but tests are usually negative, so I call them “Pseudogout” or Faucian gout. I asked her about the ‘safe and effective’ needle. She laughed and said she realized early on it was what she called a scam, a Plandemic, and had avoided the needle.

She then noticed the book I had published called “Plandemic/Scamdemic,” so she thought she had found a kindred spirit and poured out a tale of woe. She had tried to warn her family to avoid it, but they had succumbed to the lies of the legacy media and had the shots and boosters with disastrous results. One has turbo cancer, one has weird neurological problems, and one is just chronically ill.

I didn’t tell her that I suspect she got the spike protein also from “shedding” from a close relative. Anyway, I treated her, I hope successfully, and gave her a signed copy of the book.

Last night my publisher suggested I collect last year’s posts and publish them as book four in the saga of this disaster. But what to call it? I have already called it a Plandemic, a Scamdemic, and a Pseudo Plague. Maybe call it The Faucian Fiasco, or Gehazi, and the Betrayal of the West. But to understand that you would have to know the bible, and besides tha, would be to blame one person only, which is obviously not the case. Maybe call it The Triumph of the WEF, or How We Lost WW III.

Any Suggestions?

Comments

1. It sometimes seems as if we are still in the clutches of WWII, as so many German scientists were taken to the US after the war. So perhaps call it Paper Clip Two?

Other names suggested were

2. Fallacy Fallout
3. The Aftermath
4. The World's Betrayal

Answer

All are good suggestions. But it wasn't the whole world that was betrayed. China never allowed the mRNA vaccine to be used there. Sylvia Plath has a good book called Aftermath, which is quite frightening as she describes the lack of sympathy, which is certainly happening to those harmed by the vax, which they took in good faith. In most of the world, the vax-injured are being ignored.

Recognizing the disaster modern Western universities have become, Jordan Peterson, the Canadian intellectual, has launched his own internet-based replacement called The Peterson Academy. He is opening with a discourse on Nietzsche with lectures by experts in various fields. This is essentially a return to what universities were in the high Middle Ages with men like Duns Scotus, the Subtle Doctor, lecturing at Cambridge and Oxford. He was twice a Master in Paris and finally, the Lector in Cologne, Germany.

Universities were irrevocably damaged in the '70s when silly politicians opened new ones or rebranded what had been community colleges, left, right, and center. As there were not enough qualified academics to staff them, they brought on board semi-literate junior lecturers and marginally competent graduate students who inevitably hang about universities as they cannot find a real job. These ignorant know-nothings who, at least to some extent, absorbed the teaching of the Frankfurt School of socialism, are now the professors and administrators running universities. To make matters worse, DEI (diversity, equity, and inclusion) came along. Look at who was running Harvard—someone with almost no publications and who plagiarized her PhD thesis.

If you doubt how bad it is, google the hilarious Grievance Studies Affair, where supposedly academic journals published made-up nonsense—stuff that, in a moment's thought, would be seen to be ridiculous. Kids are taught this nonsense and so end up in debt and dumber after university than when they arrived.

I don't really mind that, as Kipling wrote, "The sheep was ordained to be sold." If you want to be fooled, go ahead! What I bitterly object to is the forced needling of the students with a dangerous, ineffective, and unnecessary gene therapy. Maybe, initially, the professors and administrators who mandated this were just ill-informed and stupid. But now all the evidence is there—the turbo cancers, the neurological problems, the blood clots, all these young athletes dying on the playing field. And still, some universities insist the kids take it, and others recommend it. (Google and see the names of these institutions and warn the kids to stay away.) Ignorance is no longer an adequate excuse.

Doctors still must be very circumspect about stating the truth about this monstrous affair. So, to safely write about this tragedy, add romance and violence, and call it fiction, and you get Pharma Wars, a novel written by Edna Quammie and me; a look behind the curtain. It has just been published (google it). It is also available in audiobook form.

Robert Frost, the poet, wrote,
Some say the world will end in fire,
Some say in ice.

Maybe prophetic words, not the global warming scam, which most real scientists are beginning to admit is nonsense, but in a nuclear exchange. The military industrial complex and the war hawks, not content with the Forever- Wars in the Middle East, continue to poke the bear, trying to escalate war with Russia. They seem to labor under the delusion that the nuclear exchange would be limited, and Russia would voluntarily surrender. I guess they don't know history. Napoleon and Hitler made the same mistake.

On the other hand, the great philanthropath seems determined to produce another ice age. He has been given authorization by the EU (European Union) to block the sun. It is hard to think of anything more insane. It turns out that chemtrails are not some figments of a conspiracy theorist's wet dream. Various governments have admitted they are real. Some states in the US have passed laws trying to block it.

I guess the lady running the EU either hasn't heard of Mt. Tambora or doesn't care. When that blew up in 1815, it was "the year with no summer." No summer means no crops, so starvation. Maybe that is what the oligarchs and the WEF want. Bill, after all, has fake food to sell.

An alternative ending that Frost never thought of is no kids. The pregnancy rates in heavily vaxxed populations are way down. If they manage to get the mRNA into domestic animals and crops, then it may be curtains for humanity. The oligarchs seem to think that they will survive. Do they know something we don't?

There seems to be little we can do to stop this lemming-like rush over the edge of the cliff. Maybe we can hope that somewhere there are courageous non-WEF politicians and some vote-counting machines, which are not completely compromised.

But we must not despair. Maybe Robert Frost is right, for we have promises to keep,
and miles to go before we sleep.

Comment

1. Yes. We have some work to do before we sleep. Great analysis, but one thing I don't agree with is that there is a "lady" running the EU, more like Mengele in a skirt.

Answer

One hesitates to call her Irma Grese.

Comment

2. No hesitation there. But maybe you are right. She's not the brains and is just the paid mouthpiece of the big concentration camp called the EU.

Who best foresaw the future in - Orwell with 1984, Huxley with The Brave New World, or Lewis Carroll with Alice in Wonderland? It actually looks like Lewis Carroll was the most prescient.

Think of inflation due to governments printing money. As the White Rabbit said, "It takes all the running you can do to keep in the same place. If you want to get somewhere else, you must run at least twice as fast."

Think of Woke: "When I use a word," said Humpty Dumpty, "it means what I choose it to mean, neither more nor less."

Think of the silly "boiling oceans" buffoon running the UN, the "Walrus and the Carpenter" says,

To talk of many things,
and why the sea is boiling hot,
and whether pigs have wings.

Listen to some politicians, Carroll says, "Contrariwise, if it was so, it might be, and if it were so, it would be but as it isn't, it ain't."

And education, especially a teacher's training college: "You must practice,” said the queen (Obviously a Humanities professor). “When I was your age, why sometimes I’d believe as many as six impossible things before breakfast.”

When you see the rapid change of the West from democracy and the Enlightenment to an idiotic communist slave state or a medieval theocracy, you get depressed and feel like Seneca (AD 60), who said, “Life is only bearable because you can choose the hour and method of leaving it.”

But then you think, Man up! Or as Raymond Chandler wrote, “Down these mean streets a man who is not mean must go.” Or as Hamlet said, “To take up arms against a sea of troubles.”

Comment

1. As Tennyson wrote, “Some work of noble note may yet be done.”

Life is hard, really hard for some people. As Søren Kierkegaard (1850) wrote, “Life sucks and then you die,” or words to that effect. That was certainly true of his life.

I had a series of patients in one clinic the other day with really hard stories. One young woman with a sore shoulder gets up at 4:30 a.m. to prepare food and the day’s necessities for her three kids and her husband, who works the night shift. She leaves for work at 5:30 a.m., as the public transit in Toronto is abysmal. The politicians think the answer to everything is more bike lanes in main city streets, which realistically serve no purpose other than to delay traffic further.

In the old days, a working man’s wage was enough for his wife to stay home to look after the kids. But these people are taxed to the hilt, so politicians can give money away to their friends or for some fantasy project in some other country.

Another lady with a family has parents who live independently and who are becoming demented and abusing each other. So, what to do? Nursing homes are expensive and difficult places. Edna Quammie and I wrote a book a few years ago called Rainbow through the Rain about the insurmountable problems in nursing homes.
